Ask Randy

Have questions about your recycling service?

Q: Which method of grilling is more environmentally friendly, cooking with briquettes or gas grilling?

A: Good question! Propane gives off one-third the emissions per BTU than charcoal, but propane is a fossil fuel. Charcoal on the other hand, is made from trees, which are considered to be a renewable resource, that would make them the carbon neutral option provided the charcoal is made from sustainable wood. So actually, they are about equal.

To submit a question for "Ask Randy" send him an e-mail at customerservice@westvalleyrecycles.com with "Ask Randy" in the subject line.

Red Hot Safety Tip

A coal bucket, or metal can be used to hold hot briquettes and ashes until ready for disposal. Make sure it is placed on concrete or some other non-combustible surface. When disposing of hot charcoal, it is best to gradually dump the charcoal into water rather than water onto charcoal. Stir after each addition using a metal shovel. Water dumped onto charcoal can actually explode and cause injury. Once ashes are completely cold bag them before placing into your garbage cart. Remember, even ashes that seem cold on the surface may still be hot deep inside, even after sitting for two days, so wait at least 48 hours before disposing of them in the garbage cart.

Do not place hot ashes or coals in your cart.
